I picked out this book thinking that it was a book teaching you how to draw things related to books/literature. Little did I know that it was more than that. It's also a journal where you can doodle and design your own book designs, characters, bookcases. The prompts and creative exercises really trigger me to be even more creative and think of ideas I would never think about on my own. Exercises like creating literary puns and villains only make me think more critically while enjoying the creative process. However, the best thing I like about this book is that I can use it for classroom lessons for English classes. I am currently an teacher/tutor and I find the exercises in these books able to incite interest and make English fun for students!

What a delightful little book this is! Filled with literary snippets and whimsical illustrations makes this a great gift for book lover, especially if that book lover is yourself. I enjoy the creative prompts that encourage you to add some of your own illustrations and ideas. I spend several hours daily reading heavy essays and discourses (I'm a philosophy major) and find this an enjoyable distraction.

If you love books and all things words then this book will tickle your fancy. There is a whole bunch of fun facts, lists and games all based around books and words. The doodling pages are the illustrations to go along with all things books and reading. My favorites are the step by step tutorial on how to draw a typewriter and the game, "making puns with book names and ice cream flavors". The draw a fabulous fictional place in a snow globe is pretty cool too.

I was pleasantly surprised with how in depth this little gem gets into the world of literature :) what a great fun starter for kids who love drawing and reading! Not only do you get the usual "Draw the cover for your own book!" but also draw your favorite villian, your favorite animal character, and what your own book store would look like. You get Shakespeare, other classic quotes, puzzles and exercises. I fully recommend this to anyone with a young reader or doodler!

A delightful distraction for the bookworms in your life. Literary nerds will enjoy the pun-ny humor of "Ice Cream Flavors Inspired by Books" (A Clockwork Orange Sorbet, anyone?) and step-by-step instructions on doodling Shakespeare. A great activity book to have on hand for air travel or lunch breaks - it should fit into most purses and bags. Would also make a great stocking stuffer this holiday season, as it would appeal to teens and older readers.
