Mandala is perhaps the most beautiful and awe-inspiring instructional art book I have ever used. I was introduced to Judith Cornell's work in 1993 and worked with her in week long groups at various art centers over the next seven years. She was a powerful teacher with great spiritual insight and wisdom. As a fine artist, she brought her art training to an area that had been long neglected as a serious art form in the West. Her teaching methods were stepped out in an articulate, elegant progression which made it possible for almost anyone to experience success in creating personally meaningful and beautiful mandalas. Each group art-making session was begun with a period of meditation in which the image to be created would (hopefully) arise. Days spent with Judith were days of rich, creative silence in which inner images were brought into being in a soft, spiritual setting. All of this is captured in her exceptionally beautiful book, Mandala. A reader of this book could easily acquire the few materials needed to begin a study of mandala creation following Judith's directions. The best way to use this book would be with two or three friends in a small group. As to the complaints by other reviewers about the black paper on which the mandalas are drawn, this was Judith's shortcut for beginning artists who knew nothing about "values" in art making. By having her students make an under painting in white pencil on black paper and then adding the color in a delicate second layer, she taught them values as well as providing an experiential process of bringing forth light out of darkness. Without any formal art training I was able to reverse the process later on with white paper, watercolor, ink, and colored pencil on white paper. The black paper is simply a beginning step.
