After catching her boyfriend cheating, Latreece just wants to have the same curves as all the other girls. Customer Reviews

<https://thebookmarkplace.com/2015/12/23/book-discussion-black-beauty/Romance> Score:

You're Trying Since there are multiple storylines, it's hard to score all of them fairly, but the stronger couple is in the novella. They have to balance different cultural and social expectations and responsibilities with their affection for one another. The other couples don't have as many feelings to deal with when trying out a relationship. Feminist Score: Good Effort This score was a pretty difficult decision for me - again because of the multiple stories there are some where I want to say absolutely NO and then others where I was excited to see the women standing up for each other. One story in particular deals with the social pressure to look a certain way and another shows how calling one woman an insult can represent the wider world's views about women in general.

It's giving a higher score because, even when showing things I wouldn't want to give points for, those problematic items are called out. Plus, women are the ruling queens in the storyline woven through each piece, so there's that. Diversity Score: Good Effort The stories take place in an apartment complex with mostly black and Latino/Hispanic residents – in itself is not usually represented in mainstream books. Add on that several of the families are living at or below the poverty line and you get something that is rarely seen. I really liked the world Burriss built here; it's definitely filling a hole that exists in publishing. However, there are a couple of issues. One is that the woman behind all the lessons is called "Crazy Jade" by almost everyone.
